Romanian honey

is internationally renowned and appreciated for its outstanding qualities. As a result, demand for Romanian honey has increased year by year, leading to the continued development of beekeeping in Romania in the last 25 years, and to the alignment with the quality standards imposed by all foreign market.

The climatic and melliferous conditions are favourable for apiculture in Romania. Productions as high as 25,000 tonnes have been obtained in certain years, as the Food and Agriculture Organization Corporate Statistical database (FAOSTAT) signals.

The most common types of honey in Romania are acacia, polyflora, linden, rape, sunflower, mint, honeydew, raspberry. Each type of honey has its own characteristics and benefits.

Types of honey

Polyflora honey: As the name indicates, this honey comes from nectar gathered by bees from different plants, both cultivated ones and those growing in meadows, forests, lowlands and mountains. Its colour is light creamy or pale yellow. It cristallizes quickly, turning to light grey or light brown. It has a characteristic rather strong waxy aroma, dependent on the mixture of nectar brought to the hive. The curative properties of this honey depend on the plants the nectar has been collected from.

Acacia honey: It contains a large quantity of fructose, therefore it crysallizes very slowly. The colour of pure acacia honey is light creamy. White or strawcoloured after crystallization. The taste slightly resembles that of acacia flowers. It is widely used as an addition to many drinks, dishes and desserts. It demonstrates a great number of beneficial effects on the body.

Types of honey

Lime blossom honey: This type of honey has a distinctive strong aroma that resembles the smell of a lime tree. The taste is sharp, slightly bitter. In the liquid state, the honey's colour is greenish-yellow to light amber. The intensity of colour and taste differ depending on the region the honey comes from. During crystallization process its consistency becomes fine-grained and the colour changes to white-yellow or golden-yellow. Lime blossom honey exhibits expectorant, diaphoretic, antipyretic, sedative and adipsasodic properties.

Rapeseed honey: Collected by bees from oilseed rape flowers in late spring, Rapeseed Honey is white creamy honey with a smooth texture and a soothingly mild taste. Initially, a bit thin and runny (it's almost see-through), but once it crystallises Rapeseed Honey turns almost white. Consumption of rapeseed honey is tremendously healthy. It is thought that it treats kidney, as well as eye-related diseases. This honey also contains elements important for bone development.
